

Catarina Dias de Almeida is a PhD in Chemical and Biological Engineering (2005, Minho University, Braga, Portugal), MSc in Chemical and Biological Engineering (1997, Minho University, Braga, Portugal) with a License degree in Chemical Engineering (1994, Porto University, Portugal). Since 2006, she worked as a post Doc research fellow at IBB – Instituto Superior Técnico (Lisbon University, Portugal) where she collaborated in projects related to by-products upgrade into polyhydroxyalkanoates by bacterial fermentation. She has authored/co-authored 15 international journal articles and 1 book chapter. She currently is an Associate Professor at Instituto Superior de Ciências da Saúde Egas Moniz (Monte da Caparica, Portugal), where she has been teaching, since 1996, different subjects included in BScs and integrated Master degrees (e.g. Nutrition and Food Engineering, Pharmaceutical Sciences, Forensic Sciences). Catarina is also a member of the Centro de Investigação Interdisciplinar Egas Moniz (Monte da Caparica, Portugal).